ABSTRACT

Susanty, Lanny. The Effect of Using Picture Series with Oral Questions and List of Vocabulary with Headings on the Narrative Writing Achievement of the English Department Students of Widya Mandala Catholic University. Thesis. Program Studi Pendidikan Bahasa dan Seni. FKIP. Universitas Katolik Widya Mandala Surabaya. Advisor: DR. Veronica L. Diptoadi, M.Sc.

Key Words: writing, narrative, picture series, list of vocabulary, headings.

Learning a foreign language is not only a matter of learning how to speak, read, listen, and write. The writing skill itself plays an important role in the mastery of English.

Nevertheless, the fact shows that learning how to write is not as easy as people have imagined before. Many students often find difficulties when they are asked to make a composition. This condition also happens to the English Department students of Widya Mandala Catholic University. It is simply because they face difficulties in finding what ideas and what appropriate sentences to be written in the beginning of their composition, even for writing the simplest type of writing that is narrative.

Setiawaty (1998) says that in the past, teachers usually merely gave a list of vocabulary in teaching writing and she considers that it is not enough to help the students to get ideas. Through her own experience, the writer also finds that headings are very helpful too. In this study, she would like to combine these two techniques and compare it with the picture series technique that has been proved to be a good way to teach narrative writing (Setiawaty and Hariyadi, 1998). Here, the writer would like to find out which techniques, picture series with oral questions or list of vocabulary with headings, is more effective to teach narrative writing.

In conducting her research, there are several steps that the writer follows. First of all, the writer takes the second semester English Department students of Widya Mandala University as her subjects. While for the samples of this study, the writer takes two groups that are heterogeneous. These groups, then, are given different treatments. One group was taught using picture series with oral questions, while the other group was taught using list of vocabulary and headings. These treatments were given in three meetings. Then in the fourth meeting, both groups were given the post test. The scores obtained from this post test served as the representation of the students' writing achievement and by analyzing these scores, the writer tests the hypothesis of this study and directly conclude whether there is a significant difference in the two groups' writing achievement.

The result of the post test of those groups shows that the students taught using picture series and oral questions obtained better scores than the ones taught using list of vocabulary and headings. The t-obtained is 0.716 and the t-table is 2.0264. Since to is lower than the t-table, the H_0 is accepted and the H_a is rejected. It means that there is no significant difference in those two groups' writing achievement.

Besides analyzing the students' writing achievement, the writer also made an analysis on the two score levels of the ESL composition profile that was used as a guideline in scoring these students' writing assignments. Those score levels are content and organization.

The analysis of content score shows that there is no significant difference between the groups. Since $t_o (=1.835)$ is lower than the t -table ($=2.0264$), H_o is accepted and H_a is rejected. While in the analysis of the organization score, t_o is 2.288 and t -table is 2.0264. By comparing these t -values, the writer rejects the H_o and accepts the H_a . It means that there is a significant difference between the groups' organization score.

Finally, due to the limitations of this study, further studies are expected to be carried out with more subjects and another group as the control group so that more conclusive statements and more generalizable results can be obtained.
