Interpretive Guide for College and University Placement

This is an interpretive guide of the writing scores which are obtained from the assessment based on ESL scoring rubric, both of them are designed by Jacobs et al. (Jacobs, H.L. Zinkgraf, S.A., Wormuth, D.R., Hartfiel, V.F., & Hughey, J.B. (1981). Testing ESL Composition. Rowley, MA: Newbury House.)

Score Range	Proficiency Evaluation	Placement Recommendations
		Undergraduates	Graduates
100-88	EXCELLENT TO VERY GOOD WRITING ABILITY. Should be able to compete with native writers of English on equal or nearly equal terms. Should experience little difficulty completing writing requirements in subject matter courses.	Ready to enter regular freshman composition course (for native writers of English). Should not need special help unless any components are below GOOD range.	Should not be required to take freshman composition course. May need instruction in research or technical writing.
87-75	GOOD TO AVERAGE WRITING ABILITY. Can probably complete writing requirements in subject matter courses with little difficulty, although additional time and effort may be required. Look at Profile to identify areas of strength and weakness.	Depending on standards for freshman composition, may encounter no serious problems with regular section; however, may benefit more from special international section. If certain components are weak, may need writing lab or grammar review.	Probably does not need freshman level composition, but may benefit from some directed review and/or instruction in research or technical writing. May need writing lab for assistance with graduate course writing requirements.
74-64	FAIR WRITING ABILITY. Will probably experience great difficulty completing writing requirements in subject matter courses. May be unable to compete fairly with native writers of English. Look at Profile to identify areas of strength and weakness.	Should have at least one preparatory course in composition before taking college-level English courses or subject matter courses that require much writing.	Should have at least one basic composition course before entering graduate courses with writing requirements. May also need course in research/technical writing.
63-49	POOR WRITING ABILITY. Not prepared for college level writing requirements. May also be weak in other language skills; check with tests in reading, listening, speaking.	Should have one or more preparatory courses in writing before entering college-level English courses or other courses with writing requirements.
48-34	VERY POOR WRITING ABILITY. Has virtually no writing competence. Will not be able to complete course writing requirements independently. Other language skills will probably also be very weak.	Needs two or more preparatory courses in writing (and other areas as indicated by Profile and other tests) before taking college-level English courses or other courses with writing requirements.
*The breaking points for the five proficiency levels represent an approximately normal distribution of scores (for 753 students) as follows: 100-88 (5%), 87-75 (25%), 74-64 (40%), 63-49 (25%), and 48-34 (5%).
